Rapidly, Carl and Karen raced quickly down the street into the Supermarket carpark. Startled, they both stopped behind a bin when they both saw two tarantulas standing next to the big tower with windows covering it and giant letters on top of its entrance. How would they ever find ~~the~~ his brother Kenny in this terrifying tower?

As they both stood behind the bin watching and waiting for the two gaurels to take their shift, their desperation grew bigger every second. They needed to find a way to get past these hairy monsters because a bite from them could kill or paralyse someone but couldn't think of a way to conquer this challenge. In an instant, Carl and Karen found a solution to get through without the gaurels seeing them. They noticed an old person pushed one of those shopping trollies. They knew they must grab hold of the bottom of the trolley. It was now or never.

With one of the biggest hops they could ever do they both landed on the bottom of a human food car. When they got on it very safely on the bottom of the shopping trolley they the elderly man pushed the food car into the supermarket. When Carl and Karen were in silently they both abandoned the trolley and ran looking for cover so

So no one saw them or thought that they were toys. The moving staircases were delightful, wonderful and amazing. The ice cubboards were astonishing but seemed a bit cold, however the most disgusting thing that they could ever see, at a display of crusty weapons such as pie crust and garden forks. They hoped the humans didn't use these against them.

Suddenly Kenny ran away from these crusty weapons. Scared he saw two humans walking around the corner. He turned the other way and saw his perfect opportunity, a full packet of extremely sharp pencils. He was prepared to fight these foolish humans. He ran fast. He leaped high. He fell. However his backy stiffened...

Desperately, Carl and Karen started to panic as they were searching for Kenny. Suddenly they found Kenny frozen with fear in his eyes they attempted to swoop in and save him from the black hearted beasts. In an instant they noticed that he was running around the shop screaming and shouting. To Carl and Karen's fear they both saw there was a little problem, a massive human was chasing after Kenny very quickly. They both raced fastly around the supermarket hitting every thing off counters Carl and Karen should not chance it but would they?

Instantly, Carl and Werner just caught the sight of Henry at the side of their eye. suddenly they rapidly sprinted out to Henry and took him by the arm and got him out of the shop. As they left the store moving into the sun Henry began to beg sorrowfully for forgiveness. After a while his brother and sister just forgave him for all the damage he had produced, although they were still tamping about him running off somewhere in the first place. They just hoped that he would not do anything like this again.
